Doctrine of the “Eh” Compiled by Those Who Don’t Know, but Might Be Right

Foreword: On Faith, God, and Religion

As muttered by the Nameless Fool, who may be you, but probably isn't.

Faith is what gets a person out of bed. God is the face we draw on the incomprehensible so we can look it in the eye. Religion? Often just a rulebook written by those who mistook mystery for power.

This book isn’t here to answer anything. It’s here to honestly not know, and in doing so, maybe offer a bit of peace to those who also don’t know.

It’s not sacred. It’s not final. It’s just what happened when I tried to make sense of the game called gods and lost on purpose.

Read it. Or don’t. Either way, take a breath. You’re here. That counts.

—The Nameless Fool

Doctrine

Article 1: On the Nature of Reality

1. Everything is God. The rocks. The worms. The assholes. Yes, even you. Especially you, unfortunate, I know.

2. God is not a man, a woman, a cloud wizard, or your therapist. God is probably not even “God.” Not the old-man-in-the-sky kind, anyway. But it’s a useful word, so we’re keeping it. Deal or don't.

3. The universe is aware. Probably. Maybe not. It’s doing something weird, and so are you.

Article 2: On Conduct

1. Do whatever you want. Seriously. You’re God. Live your life.

2. But maybe don’t be a dick. Not because it’s wrong—just because it makes everything worse. Also being chill usually hurts less. Usually. Or don't. It's your vibe, your chaos.

3. If you hurt someone, that’s on you. If they hurt you back, that’s also on you. This is the balance. You’ll be fine. Or not.

Article 3: On Truth

1. No one knows anything for sure. That includes this doctrine. Especially this doctrine.

2. Faith is fine. Doubt is better. Awareness is best. Certainty? Suspicious.

3. You are not God. You are also God. That’s the paradox. Live with it.

Article 4: On Afterlife, Rebirth, and Whatever Else

1. Maybe you get reincarnated. Maybe you rot. Maybe you become light. The honest answer is: we'll see. Or not.

2. If you're afraid of death, that's okay. So is everyone else. Just don't let it make you an asshole.

3. Enlightenment is just realizing no one knows what the hell is going on and being cool about it.

Article 5: On Worship

1. Meditate, dance, scream into the sky, stare at a tree, kiss someone's forehead, pet a dog. These are all forms of worship. And so is most everything else.

2. The only metaphorical sin is spiritual arrogance. The only commandment is don't act like you've got it all figured out.

3. The best response to most things is a shrug, a raised brow, and a "you good?"

Final Words

If you feel lost, confused, or like none of this makes sense: Congratulations. You're doing it right.

Go in peace. Or don't. Whatever works.

FUQ — Frequently Unasked Questions

Q: What's the point of all this?

A: To share what helps me and answer a few questions that can't be answered with actual truth.

Q: Do you actually believe this stuff, or is it just a joke?

A: I believe the same truths—they're just told in a more whimsical light. But hey, can't take yourself or your beliefs too seriously. That's how Kool-Aid cults start.

Q: Why call it a religion at all, then?

A: To say fuck you to every single power-hungry monster who sees religion as a tool for control.

Q: Isn't this just nihilism with sass?

A: Absolutely not. Your actions matter—not to me, probably, but to everyone directly affected by them. Meaning's an inside joke you write yourself. Whether it lands is up to the crowd—and the timing.

Q: Okay but seriously… what do I do with this?

A: Firestarter. Asswipe. Coaster. Something to read on the shitter. Or hey—maybe you take it for what it is and it helps. I don't know. Nor do I care.

Q: Are you trying to start a movement or something?

A: Nah. That'd be a lot of effort. If anything, I'm trying to lay to rest a chapter of my life I like to call seeking answers that don't exist. This is me putting it to bed. Never wanted a movement, cult, or followers. If anything, I fear religious movements—people usually die when religions start moving en masse.

Glossary
For those who still need definitions—fine, here's the cheat sheet.

Faith – A powerful belief in something unknowable. Often confused with certainty, but they're actually strangers who just look alike in the dark.

God – A useful placeholder word for that which is beyond understanding. Like algebra's x, but cosmic.

Truth – Not an opinion. Not a vibe. Not what you feel. Just an empirical fact. Good luck finding many.

Prayer – The act of speaking with intent, often to oneself, sometimes to the idea of God. God probably isn't listening. You are. That's why it works.

Sin – Not real. Try crime, pain, or being a dick. "Sin" is mostly branding. People needed something scarier than natural consequences. That's all.

Postscript: A Final Shrug
If you made it this far, congrats. Or condolences. Or maybe both. That's enlightenment, probably. Either way, thanks for reading this confused little text.

May your chaos be holy, your silence loud, and your inebriant of choice be strong, strange, and easily refillable.

Dedication

For the lost, the angry, the confused and fed up. For the silly, the tired, the hurt and the wise. This is for you. Or not. Whatever works.

Post-Postscript: In Case of Misuse, Read This

This book is not meant to be cherry-picked. Don't slap a quote on your nonsense and call it cosmic. If you're gonna use this, use all of it—or none at all. No half-shrugs.

Yes, the author has a bone to pick with religion. No, the author does not think faith, belief, or sacred ritual are bad. In fact, this whole mess could probably live inside most religions just fine—though the author doubts they'd appreciate the company.

The author believes in people thinking for themselves. That's why there's no name. If you find yourself following someone who preaches this text as gospel, turn around. They missed the shrug.

If you think this book is anti-truth or anti-science, that’s your problem. Read again. Slower.

And hey—if you do get it, you’re not better than anyone who didn’t. You’re just somewhere else on the path. We’re all fumbling in the same dark.

Oh—and don’t use this to check out of life. If anything, it’s a way to check in. Shrug your way into the mess, the mystery, the moment. That’s where the good stuff lives.

Also, if you didn’t laugh even once… you probably didn’t get it.

So seriously don't make this weirder than it already is.

Quotes for Those Who Want Them and Those Who Don’t
As compiled from the mutterings of A Nameless Fool, circa whenever:

“Reality is just light bouncing off causation.
Anything more or less is just the details—unimportant, yet meaningful only because you look at them.”*

“Shut up.”

“Food tastes great, what else matters.”

“Beauty is everywhere but so is shit.”
